Prior to joining the Bar, Meghan worked for the National Centre for Domestic Violence, volunteered as an Appropriate Adult at the police station and supported children with Attachment Disorder to develop emotionally and educationally. Meghan's experience of managing vulnerable individuals means she is able to successfully build a rapport with clients to enable them to feel at ease. Meghan therefore has a particular interest in assisting vulnerable clients to navigate the legal system and to ensure their case is properly put forward.

Meghan now specialises in Children Law both Public and Private Law.

In Public law, Meghan represents both parents and Guardian's and has attended the High Court on urgent applications.

She regularly accepts instructions from parents in private law disputes involving a wide range of issues varying from allegations of serious domestic violence, sexual abuse, substance misuse and parental alienation.
